About the livellest week we have had, | wasn't it? From the second Francia reception, on Sanday night, to the Woman's Club function, which ended on the stroke of twelve fast night, we were gay straight through the seven days.

There were no bulls, to be sure, with the one exception of the Wednesday cotillon, which only includes its members, but there was plenty size. The theaters had things quite the'r own way. I saw posi-tively everybody who ever ventures inside a playhouse either at the Century of else the Olympic at some time during the week. The Monday-pight nudlence at the former house was exceptionally brilliant, in honor of the Rebyn-Blossom production, while Mrs. Currer had all the debutantes and the unmarried women at her two matinees, and all the stald married

By the way, Chicago is down in the doleful dumps since the theaters closed, It is not even considered good form for two young people to be seen eating things at a downtown cafe later than the dinner hour, since there is no theater excuse for a supper. Nor is it permitted the young to even make an appearance on any of the downtown thoroughfares after 6. Howling clubs and the many social organiza-tions in which Chicago abounds have been the only resources of those who must be

I hear interesting rumors of an engagement between the good-looking and very well-groomed young weman who is secretary to one of the most important women's clubs in town and a certain foreigner, who is her exact opposite in type and coloring, and who holds one of the most important positions in the preliminary work of the World's Fair. His duties will be finished when the Fair opens its gates, and he will then depart for his native land, to return next fall, I understand, and marry the secretary.

The latter has been in mourning for two years, but is now beginning to go about a little, while she has not entirely discarded her black. She is a most accomplished and wealthy young woman, and popular in the exclusive set.

The Adele Jones-William McKenzie wedding last Wednesday morning in Kansas City has interested St. Louis society considerably, since the bride, who is a sister of Mrs. Andre Scanlan and a cousin of Eugenia Magianis, is quite as well known here as in her own town.

The Scanlans, Miss Maginnis, Jack Kearney, Mr. and Mrs. James Gant and the first wedding in the Jones family seven years ago, when Georgette Jones was married to Andre Christy Scanian of St.

with several vocal solos besides the organ, The bride wore white panne velvet, with a transparent guimpe bordered with oldrose points. A tulle vell fastened with white orchids and a large arm bouquet of lilies of the valley, combined with orchids, were embellishments. The bouquet had a shower effect, composed of tiny bunches of lilles tied with tulle, so arranged that they were separated from the main bouquet afterwards and each given

There was only one bridesmald. Miss Gladys Jones, who wore white chiffon with triple flounces scalloped and edged with ruchings of the chiffon Chiffon roses trimmed the bodice, while a large chiffon hat was worn, trimmed with primroses in pink. She carried a shower of bridesmaid roses. Andrew Cooke of Cincinnati was best man.

The bridegroom gave his bride a crown of diamonds set in platinum, which she wore; and the bride gave her maid a bracelet studded with pearls and a pearl heart to correspond. The ushers, who were Jules Jones and Earl Allen, received watch fobs, jeweled, and the best man had a similar sift. The Mckenzies will spend their honeymoon of two months in Cali-fornia, going then to live in Cincinnati, forks," or "breakfast without knives," and Miss Tille Rasch, accompanied by whichever way you choose to put it, was one of the elaborate affairs of the week. The elaborate affairs of the week. St. Louis women dress much more than they used to do. Six or seven years ago the woman who put on a white lace dress some more went up for the wedding, which built-no, we said "made" then-over pale was quite large and elaborate, susgesting pink silk, with all her diamonds and a corsage bouquet of violets and lilles of the valley, and who went thus gorgeously attired to a breakfast party at noon, would have been considered as entirely out of her mind. Nowadays it is the correct thing to wear your best to midday functions when they are large, and the present rage for fussy trimmings and much lace bids fair to continue indefinitely.

Which makes me think that no small number of women right now are beginning to cogitate over what they will wear next summer to the Fair. I met Mrs. Douglas Cook doing some pedestrian stunts on the boulevard the other afternoon, and admired her new tailored frock of blue cloth, well-braided, but simple in its cut and its

"It's to be my piece de resistance for the Fair," said Mrs. Cook, "unless the weather gets too warm, when I shall wear some en gowns, short-skirted, of course, with cool waists. Why, nobody who gives her clothes any thought whatever will dream of wearing anything else than short skirts all next summer. Fancy us dragging trains in muslins and dotted Swiss over those roadways and through those buildings. I for one am duly thankful that the short skirt has lived until Fair time, if, indeed, it ever does go out of style."

Emma Whitaker, Louise Simpkins and Alice Morton, in habits of black cloth with long coats, and all mounted on their favorites, went cantering up Lindell boule vard together last Thursday-that balmy springlike afternoon, just the day for a brisk ride. They all wore their locks braided and tied tight at the nape of the looked fust about fifteen and a half. Miss Simpkins sits her horse especially well. She rides with a side saddle, as, indeed, do

"Those Knelsel angels," as somebody in the East calls them, had quite the largest and smartest audience that they have ever played before in St. Louis last Tuesday night. And it was an appreciative audince, too, still as death through every single number. The boxes held parties mainv of women, though some few husbands and brothers bobbed up here and there Chamber music, to be enjoyed, must be thoroughly understood, and most American business men never have time enough to go in for hard study concerning the

Mrs. Wallace Montague looked exceptionally well. I thought, that night, down in a stage box. She wore black spangled hat, a fine contrast to her blonde hair and fair skin, with a touch of ermine somewhere. Mrs. Garretson, in the Montague box, was another pretty blonde in black.

The Southern travelers are getting off, day by day. Doctor Elishas Gregory and his two daughters went down to Ormond last week, and so did Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Shwyer, who are anticipating some golf tournaments at that winter place of summer festivity. Mrs. Robert Stockton, who is chaperoning Miss Salveter, is at Palm Beach, and so is John Kennard. Mrs. Ballard and Miss Gertrude Ballard went to Eureka Springs for a few weeks, last SERENA LAMB.
